A Treatise on Shades and Shadows: And Linear Perspective (Classic Reprint) Charles Davies

Excerpt from A Treatise on Shades and Shadows: And Linear Perspective

Within the last few years a great change has taken place in public sentiment, as to the importance which should be given to mathematical studies in comparison with other branches of education. Until recently it was thought that mere practical rules, unaccompanied by demonstration, were abundantly sufficient for all useful applications of mathematical science, and that the mind of the scholar could find richer nutriment in Virgil and Homer, than in the propositions of Euclid, or the sublime theories of Newton.

But it is auspicious to the cause of sound learning, that these opinions have given place to more rational views of education; that we are at length convinced it is better to reason than merely to remember; and that the value of an education is to be estimated by the ability which it gives to the mind of thinking profoundly and reasoning correctly.

In presenting to the public the following Treatise on Shadows and Perspective, the author cannot but flatter himself that he shall add something to the common stock of useful knowledge.
