In distinction from romance, history is defined as A true story or record of important events, and the writing and publication of this little volume was undertaken with the desire that there may be a continuity of some of the facts already published in a county history some twenty years ago. As it was my fortune to furnish the greater part of the Jerome Township history for that publication. For reason of the limited space in this volume, many interesting historical incidents must be omitted, yet we of the third generation from the pioneers who first settled in Jerome Township, have heard from the lips of our fathers and mothers many thrilling stories of Indian warfare, hunting, and other interesting incidents of pioneer life, which should be handed down to our descendants. It has therefore been a pleasant duty to record for the future historian some of the facts that have not been heretofore published, to be utilized fifty years hence when he writes of the present progressive fourth generation. The story of the manner of living in the log cabins, the trials and hardships of the early settlers, will always be of intense interest to the first generation that has passed to the other shore, and I hope they abide in a land where the birds sing as sweetly, the stream flows as gently as they did along the banks of Darby and Sugar Run a century ago. Perhaps the boys and girls of fifty years ago, whose hair they gaze at these pages, may go back in memory as I have done, gaze into the wood fire at the old homestead, and have once again the days of childhood and youth. Down the other side of the hill facing the sunset you can see in that flickering blue the corner in the cove where you coned over your lessons in the long winter evenings.
