Excerpt, Book 1, The Vampire's Bride

Donovan smirked as we began our trek once more, "Now where was I?"

"My father..." I said through gritted teeth, seething at the feel of his cold flesh against my own. He was a monster.

"Ah yes, how much the King has failed." Donovan hummed again, trying to collect his thoughts, "Oh, where should I even start, he's such a mess."

"Violet, why are you here?" He asked before I could snap at him again, smiling so widely at me that his fangs were fully exposed.

At the bright white glint of his teeth, I flinched, turning my face resolutely forward. When I didn't look at him, he almost seemed human.

"To marry you." I said with a dark scowl.

"Marriage. You must be so pleased, to be marrying a vampire. Won't it be the happiest day of your life?" He cooed, squeezing my arm gently, "What a kind leader you have to do such a thing for his only daughter."

I swallowed, eyes narrowed forward, "We all must make sacrifices." I responded coldly.

"I suppose." He retorted with a snort.

Silence fell tense over our shoulders, though it would seem that the vampire commander was enjoying it much more than myself.
