World War 2 military political satire, where explosive mortar shells are an alarm clock, and there is the non-stop whiz of passing bullets and the cries of fallen comrades. World War 2 never ended. Devastation is all the world knows and continued survival is not something handed to you, it is a skill and you fight for it.

In this post apocalyptic fiction, one must become something more than a man to survive. You must not only excel on the battlefield, but progress beyond the battlefield to create something else entirely. The apocalypse has come and gone leaving a war torn and desolate landscape. One man rises who defines leadership and loyalty. An individual capable of rebuilding some semblance of civilization, but fought on all sides from enemies who do not want man to rise again and will do anything to stop him.

Can this platoon leader simply known as “The Lieutenant” and his band of brothers, reverse mankind's Final Blackout?
